William L. Hahn is a member of the Litigation group at Conway Farrell, where he counsel's clients in connection with a wide variety of matters. Bill has successfully defended clients in all kinds of personal injury actions, including those involving premises liability, construction, intentional tort, sports and recreation, supervision, and motor vehicles. He is involved in all stages of litigation, with particular attention to suit evaluation, depositions, motion practice, trial preparation, and appellate practice. He has argued and won appeals in the First and Second Departments of New York's Appellate Division.

Prior to joining Conway Farrell as a partner, Bill defended insurance related claims for more than 15 years at a prominent Manhattan firm. His practice focused on the defense of complex and high exposure accident cases and appellate practice.

Based on his relationship with his clients, Bill is very knowledgeable and familiar with their practices. He discusses risk management issues and helps manage his clients' claims in a timely and cost effective manner.
